

Amber Lam - Essay

Personally, I want to become somebody who saves others, that's why I'm going into Nursing and becoming a physician assistant after. At the same time, I want to keep up with the art I create because it helps to relieve any bottled up stress I have. It has been challenging to follow my path during my high school career because I struggled with getting a job in order to save up money towards my college tuition, doing well in class, completing the technical portions for college, and applying for scholarships. When I was first applying for jobs I got rejected because my interviews didn't go well, but I learned from my mistakes after talking about it with my parents and got my very first job. It has been a long journey to get to where I am now. I wish to draw on what I've learned about Michael Rothberg's legacy to inspire my own by working hard like him and trying my best to succeed in my career path. Currently, I am still a powerless student, but when I am able to get on my own feet I want to help others as Michael Rothberg did. I will find my own path and create deep connections with those around me slowly but surely and never give up, and even if I succeed I will help others out there who could use support like how Michael Rothberg dedicated his time and energy to different causes.
